I. Course Description

Americans appear to be more divided than at any time since the Civil War. In this course, we will examine the political nature of divisions in American society and their partisan roots. We’ll begin by asking how divided Americans really are, and what the main points of difference and commonality are. Next, we will read the state-of-the-art literature on polarization as we seek to establish the primary causes of existing divisions. We’ll spend considerable time examining the racial, economic, and alternative schisms dominant in American society and seek to understand how these get translated into politics. In addition, we will look at the role of institutions in creating, perpetuating, or alleviating stifling divisions, including political parties, campaign finance, and inbred human characteristics. The course is reading and writing intensive, and is conducted similar to a graduate seminar, offering undergraduates the opportunity to hone their skills and deeply explore the subject.

II. Course Objectives

I have three broad objectives for this course. First, students will learn the theoretical and historical underpinning of partisanship and political parties in the United States. Second, students will develop their critical thinking skills through regular reading and writing exercises. Third, I aim to stimulate students’ curiosity about politics and creative means of studying questions pertinent to modern problems and interests.

III. Teaching Philosophy and Teaching Style

My teaching philosophy is based on three primary principles.

- First, I believe the gap between undergraduate and graduate coursework in political science is too broad. I therefore introduce advanced theoretical concepts in undergraduate classes so that students understand the true value of studying politics as a science; moreover, should any student choose to pursue advanced or graduate work in political science, they will be well prepared.

- Second, I believe in incorporating current events into classroom lessons. Nothing in science seems concrete until one can “see it with their own eyes.” Reading a daily newspaper and following current events, then applying theoretical concepts to political happenings helps to clarify theoretical concepts and demonstrate their utility.

- Third, as this class has a heavy reading and writing load, I seek to help students develop strategies of workflow and time management that provide them with increased capacity for digesting significant quantities of dense material, while remaining active and critical of the subject. Written and oral articulation skills are in high demand in today’s economy.

- Finally, as an instructor and a leader of class discussions on everything from lawmaking to elections, I aim to remain politically neutral and non-partisan. Students should learn to collect and evaluate information on their own. I would not want students who disagree with my political views to hear all course information with a skeptical ear; nor would I want students who tend to agree with my views to accept everything I say at face value. I encourage students to express their views, be critical, and challenge information when it is appropriate.

My teaching style is consistent with my philosophy. I use a Socratic-style in the classroom in which I frequently ask questions and encourage an interactive learning experience. I do my best to learn students’ names, encourage participation, and create, what I hope is, an open learning environment where students feel free to question, comment, and explain how they view course content. Such an environment helps to foster student interaction, thinking, and analytical and creative skills. Moreover, while lectures are important because they help to distribute necessary information and facts, they are not usually the most effective way to learn information. For this reason, we will do a variety of activities in the classroom. Successful performance in this course will include classroom participation and working in and out of class with your peers.

IV. Student Responsibilities

A. Class Attendance and Participation. Learning is an active, rather than passive, exercise. Accordingly, every student is expected to attend class as well as be prepared to ask questions about and comment on the readings. You need to complete the daily reading assignment prior to the class meeting. You will be much more successful in this class if you attend regularly, take notes, pay attention, and participate.

B. Readings. As is the case with attendance, keeping pace with the reading is essential to succeeding in this class. It is your responsibility to obtain copies of the readings prior to the date we will discuss them in class. I will do everything I can to make this task easier for you.
You will be much more successful in this course if you complete the assigned readings and take notes on them.

C. Technology The use of laptop computers, tablets (such as iPads), and smart phones is prohibited in class, except when instructed to do so. The costs associated with electronic distractions, to you and those around you, outweigh the benefits of immediate supplementary classroom information. Students may use specific instructional applications, such as Blackboard, only when instructed to do so. However, students may not use laptops or other devices on a general basis in this class. If these restrictions pose a challenge for you, please discuss it with me. For more information on the benefits of taking notes by hand, see this.

D. Cheating, Plagiarism, and Academic Integrity. Students in this course will be expected to comply with the George Mason University Honor Code (see http://honorcode.gmu.edu/). There are three simple guidelines to follow with respect to academic integrity: (1) all work you submit must be your own; (2) when using the work or ideas of others, including fellow students, give full credit through accurate citations; and (3) if you are uncertain about the expectations for any assignment, ask for clarification. Any student engaged in any academic misconduct will receive an F on the offending exam or assignment. Egregious violations will result in an F grade for the course and will be reported to the appropriate Dean’s office. These violations include cheating on an exam, using someone else’s work as your own, and plagiarizing the written word. Plagiarism (using someone else’s words or ideas without providing credit or citation) is a serious offense. If you have any questions at all about what constitutes cheating, plagiarism, or academic misconduct, please ask the instructor.

E. Students with Disabilities. If you have a disability for which you are or may be requesting an accommodation, please let me (the instructor) know and contact the Office of Disability Services (ODS) at (703) 993-2474 or http://ods.gmu.edu. All discussions with me regarding disabilities are confidential.

V. Course Requirements and Graded Evaluation

There are four graded requirements for this course, described below. Grades will be calculated on a non-curved typical A-F scale where,

Daily Writing Assignments (20%) Each class period will begin with a writing activity. All students will be expected to write, by hand, a response to a provided prompt in a limited time format. The prompts will relate to readings, current events, and topics of class discussion. The activities are designed to hone students’ writing skills through regular writing activity. Students who have not completed the assigned readings for the day will have difficulty with these activities. The activity will also include a peer-review component so students gain experience with providing and receiving constructive reviews. The lowest two scores for these assignments will be dropped from each student’s overall course grade.

Blog Posts (30%) Each student will write three 1000-word blog posts during the semester. The goal of the post is to apply political science insights, data, theories, or historical context to some current events. Due dates for blog posts will be determined on the first day of class, where each student will sign up for three dates throughout the semester on which to submit their posts. Each class period can have no more than 4 students submitting posts.

Midterm Exam (20%) There will be an in-class, midterm examination in essay format. The exam will be closed book and closed note. The exam is on Tuesday, October 17.

Research Paper (30%). All students will write a research paper on a topic of their choosing (minimum 18 pages, excluding titles, bibliography, tables, graphs, notes). Papers will not exceed 30 total pages, inclusive. Papers will explore an important question of American partisanship or politics and draw upon the latest literature in the field. Students are encouraged to undertake original analysis in their projects, although the course will not cover analytical techniques (students should draw on analytical strategies learned in other courses). Papers will be scaffolded in the following way.

- Step 1: State a research question (DUE: Sept. 28) 10%
- Step 2: Annotated bibliography (DUE: Oct. 12) 10%
- Step 3: Introduction (Due: Oct. 26) 10%
- Step 4: Theory and Literature Review (Due: Nov. 9) 15%
- Step 5: Complete Rough Draft/Submit for Peer-Review (Due: Nov. 28) 15%
- Step 6: Return Peer-Review (DUE: Dec. 5) 5%
- Step 7: Final Draft (DUE: Dec. 15). 35%

VI. Policies on late work, make-ups and extra credit

A. Can I submit an assignment late? Students may submit an assignment after its due date for a 5% (off the total possible score) penalty per-24-hour period that the assignment is late.

B. What if I miss an exam? Make-up exams are only given in the case of verified illness or family emergency, such as a death in the family. Documentation is necessary to receive a qualified make-up examination. Students who arrive late to an in-class exam may still sit for the exam if no other student has already submitted their exam; once a single student hands-in their exam, no others may begin the exam.

C. Do you offer extra credit? No.

D. What can I do if I perform poorly on an assignment? Students who receive a 72% or less on a homework assignment or essay (not exam) may re-do the assignment for a replacement grade. Re-do assignments are subject to a 5% per day penalty starting from the day graded assignments were returned to students in class (regardless of attendance). Assignments that were originally submitted past the due date are NOT eligible for re-do.

VII. Texts

The reading assignments are chosen to buttress and expand on the analytic foundation laid in class. Please notify the instructor about problems obtaining the readings as soon as possible. The following materials are required and can be found at the campus bookstore.
